ABSTRACT

In 1995 an inventory of 32 Washington State community and technical college distance education activities was completed. Data were collected for fiscal year 1994-1995 on classes, enrollment, and full-time equivalent students by funding source for eight predefined types of distance education: (1) correspondence courses; (2) telecourses; (3) audio teleclasses; (4) audiographic teleclasses; (5) one-way video teleclasses; (6) two-way video teleclasses; (7) computer/online conferencing; and (8) multimedia teleconferencing. Results from the survey, which has since been conducted yearly, established a baseline of distance education activity in Washington community and technical colleges. In this report, data are summarized by individual college profile, distance education implementation profile, and state system distance education efforts. Yearly summaries and comparisons are included to provide a perspective of distance education changes, patterns, and trends that occurred during the 4 years in which these studies were conducted. In 1997-1998, 2,608 distance learning classes were offered, with 33,209 students enrolled. Appended are the survey instrument, an operational definition of distance education and each of the eight distance education implementations, a report of the total instructional efforts for the Washington Community and Technical College System from all funding sources, and a chronology of key distance education developments in the college system. Overview and Executive Summary

Overview And Executive Summary

Background

In cooperation with the State Board for Community and Technical Colleges and the Communications Technology Center, an inventory of 1994-1995 Washington State community and technical college distance education activities was completed in 1995. Class data, enrollment data, and FTE data were collected by funding source for eight predefined implementations of distance education. Results from that survey established a baseline of distance education activity in the Washington State community and technical colleges. The survey was subsequently repeated to gather data for 1995-1996 and 1996-1997 distance education activities.

Purpose

This study was conducted to survey 1997-1998 distance education activities and to analyze distance education patterns and trends in the Washington State community and technical colleges. These data are summarized in a number of forms--individual college profiles, distance education implementation profiles, and summaries of System distance education efforts. Yearly summaries and comparisons are included to provide a perspective of the distance education changes, patterns, and trends that occurred during the four years in which these studies were conducted.

Survey Methodology

For the 1994-1995 study, definitions of distance education and eight (8) implementations of distance education were developed (see Appendix A). A survey instrument was designed and distributed to all 32* Washington State Community and Technical Colleges (see Appendix A). Distance education activities were collected via data matrices of distance education activities by quarter and implementation. For each implementation, three major measures were recorded: 1) Number of Courses; 2) Total Seatcounts (duplicated enrollments); and 3) Quarterly Full-Time Equivalent Students (FTE). Each measure was inventoried by funding source: 1) State Supported; 2) Contracted; and 3) Self-Supported. All surveyed colleges completed and returned the survey instrument.

For consistency of interpretations the definitions, data categories, and data collection instrument used for this study are identical to those used for the 1994-1995, 1995-1996, and 1996-1997 surveys. Spokane Community College and Spokane Falls Community College data were combined into a "district" response for the 1994-1995 study. Spokane District data were subsequently reported separately in the 1995-1996, 1996-1997, and 1997-1998 studies. To provide a base for comparisons with 1994-1995 data, data from the two Spokane colleges are combined in Section VIII of this report.

*Data were not collected from Cascadia Community College, Washington's 33rd community college, since it is in the formative stage of development and will not begin offering classes until the fall of 2000.

Report Methodology

This report is organized into nine sections and three appendices. Section I provides an overview and executive summary of the project. Sections II through IX move from listings of individual college distance education activities to a comprehensive overview of distance education in the Washington State Community and Technical College System. Section II provides individual college quarterly 1997-1998 distance education activities listed by implementation type. In Section III, individual college distance education data are reported by quarterly summaries of the eight distance education implementation types.

Section IV reports yearly distance education implementation summaries followed by charts of quarterly funding source distributions of distance education implementations. In Section V, distance education implementation data are aggregated to report total quarterly and yearly distance education efforts. Section VI provides quarterly System analysis off each implementation type as a percentage of distance education instruction and as a percentage of instructional effort from all sources. Section VII provides quarterly and yearly System distance education summaries as well as analyses of quarterly System effort by funding source.

In Section VIII, 1994-1995, 1995-1996, and 1996-1997 distance education activities are compared with 1997-1998 data for individual colleges. Section IX compares aggregate 1994-1995, 1995-1996, 1996-1997 distance education activities with aggregate 1997-1998 distance education activities.

Appendix A contains the survey instrument and an operational definition of "distance education" and each of the eight distance education implementations used in this study. Appendix B reports total instructional efforts for the Washington Community and Technical College System from all funding sources. Appendix C contains a chronology of key distance education developments in the Washington Community and Technical College System.

NOTE: Throughout the report, quarterly summaries reflect quarterly FTE data and annualized summaries reflect annualized FTE data.

Observations

- Thirty-one (31) colleges participated in some form of distance education during 1997-1998.
- Colleges participated in six (6) of the eight (8) identified distance education implementations. No data were reported for audiographic or one-way video.
- Telecourses are the largest implementation of distance education. More colleges (26) participate in telecourse delivery than any other form of distance education.
- Telecourses account for the majority of all distance education FTE. The 1,917 telecourse FTE represent 60% of all distance education FTE.
- Correspondence ranked first in the number of distance education classes (720), but ranked second in both seatcount (7,085) and FTE (720).
- Online/Computer courses rank second in participating colleges (20), but rank third in the number of distance education classes (374), seatcount (4,901), and FTE (426).

- State support is by far the most common form of funding for distance education. State support was responsible for 76% of all distance education FTE.

- Two-way video ranked fourth in the number of participating colleges (12), classes (186), seatcount (1,700), and FTE (167).

- Audio teleclasses and multimedia classes were the least commonly reported implementations (one college each) and represented a very small percentage of total distance education FTE.

- Distance education seatcounts and FTE grew steadily each quarter for 1997-1998.

- State support funding accounted for approximately two-thirds (64%) of distance education classes, but generated even greater percentages of total distance education seatcount (77%) and distance education FTE (76%).

- Contract funding accounted for 17% of total distance education classes, due primarily to a large number of correspondence programs through military contracts at one college. Enrollment in contracted distance education classes was relatively low, as evidenced by the small percentage of total enrollments (5%) and FTE (5%).

- The percentage of self supported distance education classes (18%) was consistent with the percentage seatcount (18%) and FTE (19%).

Observations

- The percentage of state support distance education classes (64%) is less than the percentage of total System state support classes (78%). The gap between the percentage of state supported distance education FTE (76%) and the percentage of total System state support FTE (82%) is narrower.

- The percentage of contract funded distance education classes (17%) is greater than the percentage of total System contract funded classes (11%). The percentage of contract funded distance education FTE (5%) is considerably less than the percentage of total System contract funded FTE (15%).

- The percentage of self support distance education classes (18%) is greater than the percentage of total System self support classes (13%). An even greater disparity exists for self support distance education FTE (19%) when compared with total system self supported FTE (3%).

- Distance education FTE account for about 2.3% of total System FTE.

Observations

- With the exception of 1996-1997, the number of colleges offering some form of distance education increased from year to year. During 1997-1998, thirty-one (31) colleges participated in some form of distance education.
- After experiencing a 4% decrease between 1995-1996 and 1996-1997, the number of distance education classes grew by 14% between 1996-1997 and 1997-1998.
- After increasing at a steady rate between 1994-1995 and 1995-1996 (7%) and between 1995-1996 and 1996-1997 (8%), the number of distance education FTE rose dramatically by 23% between 1996-1997 and 1997-1998.
- There was a 28% increase in distance education seatcount between 1996-1997 and 1997-1998.
- Between 1994-1995 and 1997-1998, the number of distance education classes increased by 65%, the number of distance education enrollments increased by 43%, and the number of distance education FTE increased by 42%.
- Data reported by two colleges (one for 1996-1997 and one for 1997-1998) suggest dramatic shifts in distance education activities from telecourses to correspondence courses. Rather than reflecting fundamental shifts in philosophy or delivery, these changes are the result of reinterpretations of the definitions of the terms "correspondence" and "telecourse" by those colleges and should, therefore, be viewed as reporting anomalies only.

Discussion

Influential Factors

Over the course of the four years during which these studies were conducted:

- Distance education achieved respectability, acceptance and endorsement by higher education administration and the public.
- Advances in emerging technologies (Internet) and infrastructure (K-20 network) provided a foundation for alternative learning environments that support time-independent, place-independent, and pace-independent learning.
- The Educational Technology Initiative (ETI), K-20 network (K-20), and Washington Online (WAOL) projects provided funds to support curricular and delivery innovations to enhance student learning options.

- The Educational Technology Strategic Planning Project (ETSPP) and WAOL projects established a context and framework for distance education in the Washington State Community and Technical College System.
- The numbers of online courses and interactive video courses increased--due in part to investments from the ETI, K-20, and WAOL funding initiatives.
- The WACTC adopted a distance education vision statement.
- The State Board for Community and Technical Colleges initiated a comprehensive distance education strategic planning process.
- There is a growing interest and willingness by the colleges to establish cooperative efforts, such as regional consortia and inter-institutional cooperatives, for the delivery of courses and faculty development by distance education.
- WACTC endorsed and funded WAOL to provide a full AA degree.
- The Instruction Commission (IC) assumed oversight responsibilities for WAOL.
- Statewide distance education "course coding" was endorsed by the Instruction Commission and is being embedded in the MIS reporting system.
- The State Board for Community and Technical Colleges initiated a comprehensive systemwide distance education strategic plan.
- The State Board for Community and Technical Colleges is considering the possibility of a statewide coordinator to coordinate distance education activities and develop and implement distance education-related policies.

Commentary

As experiences with distance education continue to expand, there is a growing awareness that distance education is an interconnected system of people, resources, technologies, methodologies, and services. Over the past four years, the Washington State community and technical colleges used emerging technologies and innovative distance education methodologies to expand access to instructional programs and services.

Data reported in this study may reflect the growth and directions of distance education experienced by higher education throughout the nation and around the world. Online/computer classes may be one area in which growth in Washington's colleges may be attributed, in part, to the tremendous worldwide interest generated by the emergence of this methodology. Yet the growth in online/computer courses and two-way interactive video courses may not have been possible in the Washington community and technical colleges without the funding support provided by the ETI, the K-20 initiative, and individual college commitments. Complementing these factors are the increased leadership and demonstrated commitments evidenced by the System's presidents (WACTC), instructional administrators (Instruction Commission), Distance Learning Council (DLC), and other constituent groups in moving the distance education agenda from philosophical discussions to implementation strategies.

Instruments and measures required to maintain an inventory of distance education must go beyond the manual, ad hoc process used in the four distance education inventories and become more embedded in normalized administrative procedures. Inconsistent interpretations of college distance education activities are evident in reviewing data reported over the past three years. Changes, even when the impact is seemingly minimal, have significant implications in areas with small bases of activity. As interest in distance education grows and decision making becomes ever more dependent on accurate and consistent data, there is a corresponding need to develop statewide, consistent, reliable, and convenient tools to measure outcomes. The recently approved distance education course coding mechanism is a step in that direction. Additional refinement of the course coding process may be necessary as further refinements of necessary and desirable reporting outcomes emerge.

Distance education as a "separate initiative" of The Washington Community And Technical College System is evaporating. Distance education technologies and methodologies are increasingly becoming fused with all forms of educational practice. It may be more important and beneficial to the Washington Community and Technical College System in the future to focus on the continuum of distributed multimodal educational practices, rather than distance education

1997-1998 Survey Instrument

Washington Community and Technical Colleges
1997-1998 Survey of Distance Education Activities

CONTEXT

This survey updates data collected from 1994-1995, 1995-1996, and 1996-1997 Surveys of Distance Education. As with the past surveys, eight implementations of distance education are defined to identify and track trends within the Washington State community and technical college system.

PURPOSE

The purpose of this survey is to continue the baseline inventory of distance education activities within the Washington Community and Technical Colleges system. Data will be compared with the results from the 1994-1995, 1995-1996, and 1996-1997 surveys to assist in tracking and planning for distance education activities within the system. Individual college and systemwide distance education profiles will be developed.

METHODOLOGY

To provide consistency of interpretation, definitions of eight implementations of "distance education" are provided. A data matrix is provided to collect distance education effort by the eight implementation types for each academic term (Summer 1997 through Spring 1998). Each data matrix consists of three major measures subdivided by three funding sources. The three major measures are:

1) Number of Course Sections
2) Total Seatcount (duplicated headcount)
3) Quarterly Full-Time Equivalent Students (QFTES)

Each major measures is further subdivided in three discrete funding sources:

1) State Supported
2) Contracted
3) Self-Supported

Please report college distance education data by these categories for each term.

TIMEFRAME: Please return surveys by Monday, August 10, 1998.

PROCEDURE:

One survey is to be completed by each college. Please send completed forms to:

Ron Baker. Distance Education Director

DEFINITION OF TERMS

Distance Education:

Distance Education (DE) is the method for providing instruction to persons engaged in planned learning to achieve identified educational outcomes in which those persons are in a place or time different from that of the instructor(s).

Correspondence Classes:

Correspondence classes are neither time dependent nor place dependent. Students work independently with little or no in-person contact between student and instructor. Class materials are print-based, but may be augmented with audio or video cassettes. Instruction materials are delivered via mail systems or FAX machines and communication between student and instructor is conducted by mail, FAX, or e-mail.

Teleclass:

Teleclasses are live class sessions that are distributed through telecommunications technologies in real-time to students who are at a place different from that of the instructor(s).

Telecourse:

Telecourses are integrated courses of study that combine written materials, audio, and/or video materials (via cassette or other audio/video distribution systems) with instructor oversight through additional presentation, discussion or office meetings. Review sessions, tutorials, and examinations are coordinated by the instructor who is available for individual assistance.

Teleconferencing:

The use of electronic channels to facilitate interactive communication among groups of people at two or more locations. Teleconferencing is the generic term that refers to a variety of technologies and applications, including those defined below.

Audioconferencing:

The use of voice communications, usually accomplished using standard telephone lines. When more than one person is in a single location, speakerphones or special audioconference terminal equipment is employed. When more than two locations are involved, multipoint network bridging equipment is used.

Audiographics:

The interconnection of graphic display devices located at sites separated by distance permitting participants to view the same high resolution still-frame image at each site. Some systems allow annotation, writing or drawing on the screen. Audiographics is usually used to enhance another form of teleconference, such as an audioconference, where joint viewing of high resolution images is important. Connections can be made using standard telephone lines or digital communications lines, including LAN/WAN and ISDN.

One-Way Videoconferencing:

Employs one-way motion-video from an origination site to multiple receive sites. It is used where it is not important to the content or message to "see" participants at the receive sites. Receiving sites are usually provided a way to respond to the origination site, usually by audioconference (voice) or facsimile. Common transmission systems include satellite and ITFS (Instructional Television Fixed Service). Standard telephone lines usually provide the interactive audio portion where desired.

Two-Way Videoconferencing:

Similar in concept to audioconferencing, permitting voice and motion-video communications through either analog or digital signal distribution systems. If digital , a Coder/Decoder (CODEC) "compresses" the data to fit the transmission system being used (digital telephone lines (ISDN or Switched 56), fiber optics, digital satellite, or microwave). When more than two locations are involved, multipoint network bridging equipment or a switching system is used.

Computer/Online Conferencing:

Uses computer-to-computer interactions (World Wide Web, etc.) as a means of time-independent, location-independent information sharing and communication between participants. Course-related materials are exchanged electronically and e-mail is used for person-to-person or person-to-group communication. Real-time conferencing may be available through "chat" software or desktop video software.

Multimedia Teleconferencing:

An application where at least three of the above forms of teleconferencing are used together to appeal to a variety of human senses or perceptions. An example is a teleconference using two-way audio/videoconferencing and audiographics. The videoconference system provides audio and video while the audiographics provides high resolution still frame visuals.
